

MOUNTAIN[®] LIVING

THE DREAM HOME ISSUE

HOME
OF THE YEAR

GLAMOUR
IN THE HIGH COUNTRY

Nov, Dec 2012

$4.95 US

129

DREAM SPACES

THE DREAM:

A peaceful place to work and contemplate

Getting away to their rustic log home in Jackson Hole, Wyoming, wasn't always a vacation for these homeowners. When extended family and friends filled the rooms, the owners found themselves in want of their own private retreat. And so they asked architect John Carney of Carney Logan Burke Architects to build a separate sanctuary for them—a place to catch up on work or relax with a book.

"I wanted to pull the addition away from the main house," Carney says. "The idea is to leave the house and go down a long curved corridor to a much simpler, less active space."

Carney designed a sleek and spare room that provides a dramatic contrast to the log home's rustic style. A wall of glass brings in natural light, fresh air and expansive views of the Tetons. Horizontal slot windows frame views of Sleeping Indian Mountain and Wolf Mountain to the east and south.

"A palette of natural materials adds to the calm feeling," Carney says. "Striated rammed-earth walls on two sides relate to the earthiness of the site and anchor the space" while stained concrete floors and wood elements contrast with a floating copper ceiling. The room is furnished simply with classic modern chairs and a desk by Thierry Lemaire, while a centuries-old stone Buddha watches over all. >>

ARCHITECTURE

Carney Logan Burke Architects

PHOTOGRAPHY

Matthew Millman

“THE ADDITION IS A GREAT PLACE TO GET AWAY FROM THE REST OF THE HOUSE, ENJOY THE BEAUTIFUL VIEWS AND BE IN AN ARTFULLY CRAFTED SPACE.”

John Carney