COLLECTIVE IMAGINATION

CLB ARCHITECTS' Bozeman outpost may be new, but the architecture and interior design it is creating for the Big Sky state are firmly rooted in the firm's core values: attention to detail, a strong sense of place and, above all, a collaborative approach.

CLB Architects' portfolio of private and public spaces is quite diverse. What unites your work?

THE COMMON THREAD is our highly collaborative, iterative process that allows us to engage with our clients and solicit their feedback during every stage of a project's design, encompassing not just architecture, but also interior design. The result is a diverse array of work that reflects each client's unique personality and lifestyle, as well as our firm's aesthetic rigor.

After operating from a home base in Jackson since 1992, you recently opened an office in Bozeman. What makes Montana an ideal fit for your firm?

MONTANA IS QUITE SIMILAR to Wyoming from a landscape, climate and historical perspective, and it presents many of the same design opportunities and challenges.

The natural beauty and lifestyle that Montana offers are perfectly suited to our aesthetic, which emphasizes blurred lines between indoors and outdoors.

What's on the boards now?

WE WERE RECENTLY invited to compete in a design competition for two new gondola stations and on mountain facilities at Big Sky Resort. It's an awesome opportunity to work on a community project that will make a lasting impact—not to mention a fun challenge to help further develop a new identity for Big Sky.
