

Eric Logan, FAIA
Curriculum Vitae, 2024

Summary of Achievements

In a moment when technology dominates our lives, Eric Logan's architecture returns us to nature. Drawing from his native Rocky Mountain West, Eric has defined a nationally recognized design language that connects people to place.

A Deep Resonance with Place

Having grown up in Wyoming and made his career and life in the Rocky Mountain West, Eric Logan's architecture is deeply intertwined with the landscape of this storied place—a region holding special significance to the nation's shared heritage. While the built identity of Wyoming and Montana has historically been defined by imported styles and nostalgic fantasies of log cabins and park lodges, Logan has taken a different tack. His work has pushed the architecture of the Mountain West towards a contemporary expression that is bold, contextual, and materially rich, yet always sensitive and reflective of its natural surroundings. From here, the work has expanded outward to locales around the globe and across all scales.

Logan's architecture spans from residential to commercial and from functional to artful, but always his devotion is to a purity of form, an honesty of materials, and a love of craft, yielding places that inspire a deeper connection between people, and with our surroundings.

Born in the West, Celebrated Nationally

Returning to his home state of Wyoming in 1995 to begin his practice at what would become CLB Architects, Logan soon became a partner and propelled the firm to open its second office in Bozeman, Montana in 2017. Logan has been instrumental in evolving the firm into an award-winning, fully integrated architecture and interior design practice with work in 11 U.S. states, Canada, and Japan. The breadth of Logan's influence is exemplified in the nearly 100 design accolades his work has received, including 51 local and regional AIA awards. The firm was awarded the 2009 AIA Western Mountain Region Firm of the Year recognition for its contributions to design.

Logan's design impact has rippled out beyond the region with accolades including an American Architecture Award, German Design Council Award, NYCxDesign Award, Canadian Wood Council Awards, and inclusion in Architectural Record's Record HOUSES. In addition to regular coverage in national and international architecture publications including Architectural Digest, Wallpaper, Dezeen, and Metropolis, his work has been featured in a range of major news outlets including The New York Times, Financial Times, and The Wall Street Journal, a testament of its resonance with an international audience.

Artfully Connecting People, Community, and Nature

Filtering landscapes through poetic built forms, Logan's architecture brings people into intimate, reciprocal relationships with one another, and with our natural surroundings. Combining local culture and time-honored craft traditions with innovative construction methods and materials, Logan's architecture suspends time, allowing for multigenerational experiences against the backdrop of nature.

This is crystallized in Logan's many public art projects, which articulate his commitment to environmental and social sustainability. Through seven installations over 14 years, in locations ranging from the Mountain West to New York City, Logan has embraced public art for its capacity to build community engagement from the ground up. Rather than approach these projects as objects in space, Logan designs experiences that bring people together in both their use and construction, often collaborating with partners to test strategies such as material re-use and prefabrication that move us towards a healthier, more resilient built environment. Ultimately, Logan's is a practice of deep listening—to the people, communities, and environments of our world, and the mystical connections that bind them. Whether an art installation, a private home, or a public space, Logan uses the medium of architecture to enhance these connections, reminding us of the beauty and fragility of nature, and our collective place within it.
